RE: Request to Allocate More Funds to the USF Schools and Libraries Program (E-rate)

Dear Chairman Genachowski:

I am writing to ask that you take steps now to allocate additional funds to the E-rate program from the Connect America Fund. Additional funding is desperately needed to meet the rapidly growing demand for telecommunications services and Internet access in schools and libraries throughout America. This request is supported by over 1,700 people who have signed the attached petition and includes empirical data which unequivocally demonstrates the need for additional E-rate funding.

The E-rate program is headed straight off a fiscal cliff – just like the economy – unless the Commission takes immediate corrective action. Simply look at this year's supply/demand differential, and then look at where the need for E-rate dollars is headed. For FY 2012, the Commission earmarked $2.338 billion from the USF, but applicants told USAC they needed $5.237 billion, more than double the amount available and a 13.1% increase from last year. Moreover, for the first year in the program's history, the annual amount of E-rate funding was not even enough to cover what applicants needed for basic Priority One support, which was $2.370 billion.

To help bridge this gap, the Commission, to its credit, rolled over $1.05 billion in unused funds from earlier funding years. But despite this infusion of funds, the FY 2012 shortfall was still a whopping $1.756 billion. This does not bode well for the years ahead. With less money available to roll over and the growth of broadband-intensive applications such as digital textbooks, BYOD (Bring Your Own Device), online testing, and video conferencing, the Commission is facing a supply/demand differential that is going to explode.

Funds For Learning® recently conducted a nationwide survey of E-rate applicants. Our objective was to gather specific data about what the need curve for E-rate support might actually look like in the years ahead and to glean some insight into what applicants think about important E-rate issues.¹ The survey results show that a large numbers of schools: (1) depend on E-rate support

http://www.fundsforlearning.com/docs/2012/10/FY2012_FFL_E-rate_Survey_2012-10-08.pdf

to pay for Internet access and telecommunications; (2) consider the E-rate program vital to their school's future success; and (3) are worried about the lack of adequate funding the E-rate Program receives from the Commission.

Here are some other important things we learned from our survey:

- Only about 40% of respondents believe that their current level of Internet access adequately meets their schools' needs.
- Fewer than 15% believe that the Internet access and communications infrastructure they have now will adequately meet their schools' needs in the near future.
- 88% expect digital textbooks and BYOD initiatives to increase network demands.
- Most respondents either currently or soon will require updated communications infrastructure to meet the growing demand for connectivity.

It is easy to forget that in 1997, when the Commission established the E-rate program, there were no existing programs or historical data to help estimate how much demand there would be for supported services. Consequently, the Commission had no choice but to rely on educated guesswork. Today, we know that the initial estimates were wrong.

We know now, that the guesstimate of demand that formed the foundation for the E-rate Program's initial $2.25 billion cap on funding – i.e., “approximately $3.1 to $3.4 billion annually during an initial four-year deployment period and approximately $2.4 to $2.7 billion annually during subsequent years” – wound up missing the target by a mile. See First Report and Order, 12 FCC Rcd 8776, para. 531.

As a reminder of what led the Commission to decide on a $2.25 billion cap in 1997, how much has changed since then, and how extraordinarily wrong those initial estimates proved to be, the following excerpts from the First Report and Order (citations omitted and emphasis added) are particularly noteworthy:

Paragraph 530. We note that, unlike Commission programs for high cost and low-income assistance, which are based on existing programs with historical data for estimating how much support these programs may require, there is no existing program to help us estimate the cost of funding the support program we adopt under the Snowe-Rockefeller-Exon-Kerrey amendment. While the McKinsey Report, the KickStart Initiative, and other data sources attempt to estimate the cost of providing support to schools and libraries, the utility of these reports is limited insofar as they attempt to estimate costs in an area where technologies are developing rapidly and demand is inherently difficult to predict. Therefore, to fulfill our statutory obligation to create a specific, predictable, and sufficient universal service support mechanism, we adopt the Joint Board's recommendation to establish an annual cap on the amount of funds available to schools and libraries.

Paragraph 531. Extrapolating from the data provided by McKinsey, Rothstein, and NCLIS, the Joint Board estimated that the total cost of the telecommunications services eligible for discounts, as discussed above, would be approximately $3.1 to $3.4 billion annually during an initial four-year deployment period and approximately $2.4 to $2.7 billion annually during subsequent years.

Footnote 1386. The Joint Board reached these estimates based on the following assumptions and adjustments. First, the Joint Board adjusted the McKinsey base cost estimates for the full classroom model to account for discounts that McKinsey estimates: 20 percent to 30 percent volume discounts and a 10 percent discount from using volunteers to pull cable. The Joint Board also adjusted McKinsey figures downward to reflect the increased percentage of schools that have already installed internal connections since the McKinsey Report was prepared. The Joint Board increased the McKinsey figures to reflect the coverage of approximately 113,000 public and non-public schools, because McKinsey's estimates were based on only 84,500 public schools. The Joint Board also added the cost of Internet access, assuming that 75 percent of schools and libraries will take at least basic access in the first year of this program, and that all schools and libraries will use at least basic access in subsequent years. Furthermore, the Joint Board's estimates were based on deployment of internal connections and T-1 connections in approximately one quarter of all eligible schools and libraries in each of the initial four years. Finally, the Joint Board estimated the telecommunications-related costs of schools that have not yet fully deployed internal connections or more advanced access based on an estimate that basic usage by schools is approximately $525 million annually today.

Paragraph 532. We lack sufficient historical data to estimate accurately demand for the first year of this program. In the past when the Commission has established similar funding mechanisms, the Commission or the administrator has had access to information upon which to base an estimate of necessary first-year contribution levels. For example, when the existing high cost support mechanism was established, carriers were required to provide, in advance, the data necessary to estimate support amounts so that first-year collection levels could be set. When the TRS fund was established, NECA was able to provide a rough estimate of usage levels because TRS was an existing service, albeit funded differently. In contrast, no unified mechanisms exist to provide telecommunications and information services to the nation's classrooms and libraries.

The amount and type of demand for E-rate eligible services is no longer speculative. Today, the Commission has 15 years worth of data on which to draw. What's clear is that the E-rate program needs more money to succeed.

We hope that you and your fellow commissioners will support this urgent initiative.

Should you have any questions or concerns, or if we can be of assistance to you or your staff, please do not hesitate to email me at jharrington@fundsforlearning.com or telephone me at 405-341-4140. Also, we have access to a wealth of publicly available E-rate data dating back to 1998, along with the wherewithal to mine and dissect the data effectively. So, if we can provide the Commission with any additional empirical data, please let me know.

Sincerely,

John D. Harrington

DEAR FCC CHAIRMAN GENACHOWSKI:

PLEASE PROVIDE MORE "E-RATE" FUNDING FOR SCHOOLS AND LIBRARIES

For Our Children to Succeed, They MUST Be Well-Connected

I agree with you that "no area has greater potential to transform the lives of our children than education, and no technological innovation in our lifetime has greater potential to transform education than broadband Internet." But too many parts of our country remain, as you know, either unconnected or under-connected to the Internet, which means that large numbers of children are not receiving equal opportunities to succeed. To make matters worse, federal and state funding for educational technology has turned to dust during these difficult economic times - except, thank goodness, for E-rate funding. Mr. Chairman, the FCC's E-rate program is all that our schools and libraries have left - it's their lifeblood!

Unfortunately, E-rate funding is drying up too, and it's drying up way too fast. That's because demand for advanced telecommunications services and Internet access has nearly tripled since the program began 14 years ago. What was barely adequate funding 14 years ago is not nearly sufficient now, and tomorrow it will merely be a drop in the bucket. That is why the E-rate program desperately needs an infusion of funds today.

The timing, fortunately, could not be better. The FCC designed its new and exciting Connect America Fund to bring high speed Internet access to every corner of America. But the Connect America Fund needs a fully funded E-rate program to succeed. Thus it makes perfect sense to take funds from the Connect America Fund and to allocate them to the E-rate program, enough to make the latter a viable solution to the student and community access part of our country's broadband problem. That will not require increasing any fees or any new taxes, making it the perfect solution to a serious problem at a very difficult time.

Mr. Chairman, I urge you to please introduce and support an initiative to enable the E-rate program to complete its mission by allocating more funding to it from the Connect America Fund. Please give our children the connectivity and the opportunity they need to succeed.

[For additional information about this important issue, please read the Open Letter from Funds For Learning].

Thank you!
